Even a minor hit can cause severe brain damage and spinal cord injuries. Furthermore, motorcycle accidents are 35 percent more likely to result in a casualty than other vehicle accidents.

However, due to the prevalent misconception that motorcyclists are generally reckless and hasty, fighting for deserved compensation can become an uphill battle. Without the aid of an experienced attorney, insurance providers are likely to use public unawareness to lower the compensation amount paid.

Duluth Truck Accident Attorney

With the rise of America's industrial prowess – the number of trucks sharing space with ordinary, smaller vehicles has increased exponentially. And so has the number of accidents.

Of all multi-vehicle trucking accidents, 94% of the crash victims were of the other vehicle. Trucks represent a commercial vehicle usually owned by a commercial company. Extensive federal regulations are placed on such trucks and truck drivers, with special emphasis on the physical and technical well-being of the truck as well as a well-rested driver.

Truck owning companies and their insurance providers flood the scene of the accident within 24 hours, and their representatives contact the victim's family in order to lure them into a price lower than they are entitled to. Insurance agencies are particularly notorious for somehow lowering the amount of compensation owed to the victim and their family.

Having an experienced truck accident attorney by your side can be really helpful in such situations. Charles Scholle will not only guide you through the process step-by-step, but also assist you in dealing with the various tactics employed by the companies that limit your right to sue and demand compensation from them.

A truck accident veteran like Scholle not only strengthens your case, but allows you to fight for justice with better knowledge of your entitled rights and legal boundaries.
